

OSCAR'S OPTIONS

DECK

LOGLINE

A series of midlife mishaps force an aspiring writer to abandon his dreams and return home, only to discover a success that he could not have expected.

SYNOPSIS

Oscar's Options is a comedy that introduces us to a man in midlife turmoil. Oscar (the titular "O"), is a passionate yet struggling screenwriter. Young success fished him out of his home in Hamilton, Ohio and lured him to the big pond of L.A., where we meet him now a decade later: dissolute in a moribund marriage, an uninspiring culinary job, and a brittle screenwriting career.

As would be expected from a man in such tumult, O finally snaps, taking wife's Beemer and the joint savings account, and heads back to rural Ohio, hoping to find solace and bearings in old friends and family.

But running away is not a simple fix, because O's problem is on the inside. Absent his own problems, much has changed in his little hometown. Trying to reconnect with everyone he left behind years ago is tricky business. Some are cordial or downright distant, and others unabashedly hostile at O's unwelcome re-appearance.

For example, O's sister Tammy, has become an obese, hoarding agoraphobic, sneaking the guilty pleasure of the Fedex guy's daily delivery stops as her sole token of a social life. Still holding onto O's abandonment and wounds too many and deep, she refuses to let him back into her life, much less their family house!

O's lifelong friend, Bobby J., owns the town's watering hole. Bobby's loyalty is only exceeded by his willingness to dust it up, calling O out with insightful critical nuggets, offered from his perch behind the bar. In any case, they have each other's backs without boundary, as our story soon bears out.

Sonya, ER nurse and sister of O's first conquest, is shocked that he was so out of touch during all those years, that he was oblivious to her sister's passing. Awkward feelings create obstacles, yet they somehow move toward each other. Sonya's choice to be sober offers a forgiving mirror for O to maybe start to take it easy on himself, and it gives her the power to raise and be a super-present mom for...

Camera, a sixteen year-old film savant energyball! He is awestruck and inspired by O's accomplishments and his cool L.A. life. Around Hamilton, O is practically a legend – an adjective O has long abandoned to describe himself – but O sees something special in Camera – idealism, youthful caprice? Or a shadow of a former self that somehow got off track, & which shall present itself as O's final test.

It is ultimately their friendship, and O's willingness to face his own truths with the loving support of the people of home, that bring him back to the kingdom of himself. O's bounty of his vast life experience can finally be harvested for the benefit and wealth of friends and family around him, and most importantly, for O.

When going home is just the beginning...

HOLLYWOOD vs. HAMILTON

The visual aesthetics of this film will place into counterpoint the garish, over-lit, sun drenched, color palette of Los Angeles against the muted and gritty look and real feel of the Ohio lightscape. Interiors shall be lit to match the similar aesthetic of each local respectively.

This divide basically reflects our main character's struggle. The dream, the allure, which drew him to L.A., is now illusory and translucent, fake. What is real is the reality of Ohio.

As the story progresses and O's power increases, we may choose to sweeten the Ohio color palette ever so gradually, so that in the closing scenes where there is a cut back to L.A., it is the latter that looks drab and miserable.

HAMILTON

Ultimately this film is about its characters. Although most of Hamilton is populated by small town eccentrics, they are true to themselves, have huge hearts, and are willing to help when called upon. It's their approach to life and sense of belief in community that finally reaches Oscar and turns his life around.

All actors referenced here are not formally attached to the project, but are used to illustrate Filmmaker's vision of the level of cast, which will be attracted to this story and realistic to contract, and appearance.

Some of the higher value named talent obviously is listed as examples yet may agree to play small or cameo roles in the film for personal reasons or connections with the filmmakers. These are subject to professional availability and other terms.

is a struggling screenwriter with a troubled soul. His self-righteous and entitled past has finally caught up with him. He has become what he despises, a man-child without a promised land. The crossroads that he finds himself facing are psychological, spiritual, as well as existential. His saving grace is that he is a decent man who recognizes and accepts his truth. Unfortunately that only happens when it's shoved in his face.

Luke Bracey

CAMERA

Sonya's 16yr-old son. He is THE authority on movies. His knowledge is extensive, impressive, and covers the entire history of American film. Socially awkward but highly intelligent, Camera hopes to make an actual impact upon the current state of Hollywood cinema. Although neither successful nor encouraging, it is Oscar that he idolizes.

Jacob Tremblay

TAMMY

Mid 30's, is Oscar's older sister and only sibling. She's basically surrendered to life, ballooned to 300 lbs in recent years, and has become agoraphobic. She makes her living buying and selling things on Ebay so her only interaction with humans are the delivery drivers that come to her house and Camera, who helps with chores.

Mayim Bialik

SONYA

Early 30's, is that small town gal who probably could have been a big city success if she had ever left the comforts of home. Although she works at the local hospital as a nurse, Sonya's "cut to the chase" wit keeps her vibrancy relevant and her dreams contemporary. A working single mom, her primary focus is raising her son, Camera. She lives with her mother and father in the house she grew up in. The sudden death of her older sister still haunts the entire household.

OSCAR'S OPTIONS is a classic "coming of middle-age" comedy in the vein of LADY BIRD and DOPE with elements similar in tone to GARDEN STATE. Self vs Community. Past vs Present. Entitlement vs. Earned Success. Distrust vs Empathy. It is the interplay and rectification of these thematic issues that will be explored using comedy as the conduit.
